I hope it wasn't a mistake to report the theft attempt this morning to the police, and more importantly, although by pen and paper, to tell an officer in person that my property might have been stolen for a few weeks, but I have been suffering for years. And mentioned I need to stop the further damage from accumulating on my body.

I might not physically die immediately if this continues, but it certainly would look like the UK has no thought of allowing me to live as a human.

There was no reply after I sent the email as requested. It doesn't look good to me. To be honest, nothing looked good for dozens of months.

As I told the officer, I will check with the Metropolitan Police again as suggested, although I reported to the British Transport Police. I am sure there is still plenty of time for the police to enable the collection of my property, even if it hasn't been arranged yet.
