It feels most unnatural to me that you don't want to let the victims see who stole their property. Two of the reasons that supports doing so is that it lets the victims know who they should be careful with in the future and have a chance to find the thief themselves if they come across the thief.

In case I must submit a SAR, I most likely would challenge the refusal. Having to protect other people's privacy is not a reason to refuse providing relevant footage at all. I will not object that you process the footage so that the identities of irrelevant people are protected. As for the thieves, I certainly hope that you will not "protect their identities" from me, the victim.

Hello Pers,

As a member of the data protection team, I want to clarify that we are not based at the station. We can only guide you to the relevant station teams who might be able to assist with any station related queries you have. It appears they have already informed you that your stolen goods were not handed in.

Regarding the CCTV footage, I am unable to confirm whether it has been located. The British Transport Police (BTP) are responsible for this, as they act as another 'data controller'. This means they have access to the CCTV footage and will be handling the investigation as part of their crime inquiries.

You can only submit a subject access request for your own personal information. It is important to understand that the footage of anyone taking your property is not your personal information. Why organisations might partially or fully refuse a subject access request | ICO explains that we 'must also protect other people's rights over their information' so this request would be refused. However the BTP has the rights to investigate this for you.

I am sorry we cannot help you. You must allow the BTP time to conduct their enquiries and I hope you manage to get your property returned.

Kind regards,

Sheena

You don't often get email from perscamden@gmail.com. Learn why this is important

Does that mean that the CCTV footage of both incidents are found and saved?

I would like to have a copy of the footage of both events.

Unsure of what the latter half of your email meant, I went to check with the station again and was told nothing was handed in.

Dear Pers,

Thank you for your email and sorry to hear about the incidents that occurred at Kings Cross Station. Just to let you know British Transport Police (BTP) are responsible for investigating any criminal activity at Network Rail stations and have access to all CCTV footage at the stations. However, I have also copied in the station team in the event they can confirm or direct you to lost property in the event any items may have been handed into the station.

Kind regards,

Sheena

I am requesting both Network Rail and the police forces to find and secure the CCTV footage of 2 incidents. Although my email was originally written for King's Cross Station, I am also sending it to the police in case you find any information that will help with locating the footage and the progress of the cases.

(main content)

There was a theft incident on 9 Sep, in which my property was stolen. I am inclined to believe that King's Cross Station is aware of it.

Unfortunately, there has been little progress with the police, despite more than three weeks having passed. It has been painful weeks for me, where I was left with no choice but to live on the street and survive on food from charities.

I have made the request for CCTV footage to the BTP. I would like to contact King's Cross Station as well to be safe.

The incident happened around 20:00-22:30 on 9 Sep. The location was just outside the station. The area is part of the square, I guess. I can show the staff in person if necessary, as I am still stranded in the area, which I believe the Station must have noticed. I have long, messy hair and am still in the same red jacket and blue jeans, just like when the incident happened. I fell asleep in the square and woke up to find my backpack gone. My black pack was black with white strings and signs on it.

My identity as the person whose backpack has been stolen can be confirmed by the staff with me showing up in person.

Whether the process goes smoothly or not, please make sure to find and secure the footage to prevent the loss of important information and evidence.

Another theft attempt happened around 01:4x-01:5x at midnight of 29 Sep. The location was the corridor-like structure where the opposite side was GNH Bar & Terrace, if I am not mistaken. To be sure, I can show the staff the exact location in person. My clothing was the same as in the incident on 9 Sep.

Please try to reply promptly and ask everything that you need to know. While I can show up for identification and to show the exact location of the incident, it might not be easy for me and the staff to communicate, as I can only read.
